A sedge widespread in the Old World tropics (Cameroon to Central Indonesia) is generally but erroneously known as Bulbostylis puberula (Poir.) C.B.Clarke (Cyperaceae). This combination is based on Scirpus puberulus Poir. (1805) described from Madagascar, a later homonym of S. puberulus Michx. (1803) from Carolina and Georgia, USA (now Fimbristylis dichotoma (L.) Vahl). This homonymy was apparently detected by Roemer & Schultes (1817) who provided the new (and homotypic) name S. thouarsii. Nees (1834) made the combination I. thouarsii, an orthographic variant of I. thuarsii A.Dietr. (1833) and thus a homonym, even when Dietrich's name is a superfluous renaming of S. thuarsianus Roem. & Schult. (1824).

Clarke referred B. puberula to Kunth's Isolepis puberula, hence it should be '(Kunth) C.B.Clarke'. The new combination Bulbostylis thouarsii was proposed by Lye on identification labels on the isotypes in P (and perhaps elsewhere) but not published. It is proposed here and the lectotype is designated.
